

Figure 9 – Perspective view of a mid-Jurassic seismic marker showing thin-skinned detachment and extension above a variably thick autochthonous salt layer, and resulting down-slope contraction that produces a thrust. Basement below the salt is heavily faulted. See Figure 1a for location.